Jones is superintendent, with headquarters at Hamlet. The investigation was being made from headquarters and the local division had heard nothing officially tonight.

Express Standing Still.

The southbound express and the northbound passenger train were ordered to meet at Apex. It was said at the scene of the wreck that there was confusion in the orders as to the points in the yards to the meeting was to take place. The passenger train was running a few minutes late and the express was standing on the main line at the far end of the yard below the station waiting for the arrival of No. 44.

Tourists Arrive At Panama City

Fine Trip Through Georgia
Enjoyed by Constitution Parties; Bathe in Surf Sunday.

Panama City, Fla., May 18.—(Special.)—Both sections of The Constitution's big Florida fishing tour reached their destination here today after a glorious trip through Georgia, marked by the hearty welcome extended the visitors by residents of towns in which the tour had time for a brief stop. The trip was made without disagreeable incidents of any nature, the almost uniformly good roads allowing the cars to skim along without exacting toll of tire trouble or breakdown. The Atlantans have all secured comfortable rooms in hotels along or near beautiful St. Andrews bay, and many of them began the week of outdoor fun this afternoon by taking a plunge in the surf on the gulf bathing beach. Capt. W. H. H. Phelps Dies At Home for Old Soldiers

EQUIPPED LULA GUARDS DURING CIVIL WAR

Capt. W. H. H. Phelps, with sword he wore during the sixties.

Captain William H. H. Phelps, hero of the sixties, and widely known Atlanta man, died at 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon at the Old Soldiers' Home of Georgia.

Captain Phelps was born in Columbus, Ga., February 10, 1839. When he was a young man he conducted an ice cream parlor in his home city many years.

At the beginning of the Civil war, he organized and drilled the "Musogee Rifles," and was appointed first lieutenant of that command when it was accepted into the Confederate army.

Organizes Lula Guards.

In the spring of 1862, he obtained permission to return to Columbus, where he married Miss Lucy Elizabeth Briggs. He then organized another fighting unit known as the "Lula Guards," named thus in honor of his wife. He was appointed captain of this company and participated in many battles. Both fighting units were organized by Captain Phelps were trained and drilled in his erstwhile ice cream parlor.

The Lula Guards did not have any equipment and could not obtain the necessary appropriation, so Captain Phelps financed and equipped the entire company at his own expense. He also compensated several families of soldiers who had joined his fighting units. At one time, Captain Phelps stated that he paid out his entire fortune of over $30,000 during the four-year war, to enable his forces to carry on.

Sunday School Worker.

Some 20 years ago Captain Phelps was quite active in church work, being a member of the Grace Methodist congregation. For a long time he was a teacher in the Sunday school, as well as member of the official board. His particular interest was in connection with young boys and young men of the congregation.

During the last years of his active business life he was engaged in the brokerage business. At first he gave attention to cotton, afterwards taking up the wholesale line of groceries.

A year ago, in an interview with a reporter from The Constitution, Captain Phelps related the story of his surrender to the Union forces.

BIBB COUNTY POLICE SUMMONED TO HOME

Mrs. Kline's Funeral Services Will Be Held Today.
Grandmother Promises
To Care for Baby Boy.

Previous efforts to destroy his family made by Andrew J. Kline, who Saturday night killed his wife at their home on Forrest Hill park, fired a wild shot at his mother-in-law, and then committed suicide, were revealed Sunday in Associated Press dispatches received from Macon.

Kline, it is stated, was well-known in the Central City to the police force and to Bibb county deputies as a result of his encounters with the law.

Married Twice.

His first wife died while he was living there, and then he met Mrs. S. T. Mauldin, and her daughter, Bessie, then a girl of thirteen. Kline, a man past fifty at that time, wooed and won the child, and they were married soon after their meeting.

It was not long before he had trouble with his second wife, even as he had been unable to agree with his first wife, who was separated from him when she died. At one time the police were called in by his girl-bride and her mother, and Kline was kept in jail for 30 days following an alleged effort on his part to destroy his family.

Later there was a reconciliation and shortly afterwards the family moved to Atlanta. Deputies said that Kline had been arrested in connection with illicit distilling, but later was released.

ORPHAN COOS AS PARENTS' FUNERAL PLANS ARE MADE.

Orphaned by tragedy in the home at Forrest Hill park, little three-month-old Andrew Lee Kline Sunday was coping and in his usual good spirits while his grandmother, Mrs. S. T. Mauldin, and other relatives of the mother arranged for her burial, and his father's sister set about the same task in behalf of Kline.

Mrs. Bessie Mauldin Kline, the 17-year-old mother, will be laid to rest in the Sylvester cemetery, in East Atlanta, following funeral services to be conducted from the home of a sister, Mrs. M. S. Morgan, 424 Winkler street, at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon. Dr. Hambrick, pastor of the Central Baptist church, will officiate.

Andrew J. Kline, the father, will be laid to rest in the Crestlawn cemetery Tuesday morning. The hour and place of services had not been announced last Sunday night.

Harry G. Poole will be in charge of both funerals.

United States Senator from Alabama, and Democratic Leader in the Upper House of the Congress.

The tremendous cataclysm of the world war has so deranged and disorganized our self-complacent views on many things that it has become an urgent and imperative necessity to "find" ourselves again, and to re-adjust our vision to the new conditions of social and political life that have come upon us. The thought and action of our people must shape itself to conform to the new economic problems that have arisen from the ruin and devastation of a terrible war.

Entitled to Best Service.

These problems are entitled to the service of the best professional and business intellect the country possesses, but they are far from it. Questions of the greatest moment are left to the exigencies of partisan politics, whereas they should receive the serious consideration of brains skilled in the administration of large business enterprises. The objectives, now too often lost sight of, should be the endurance of peace and the happiness and security of our own people.

I believe that the paramount and overriding issues now confronting our country are:

Taxation: I favor the speedy re-

MORE THAN BONUS WILL BE AT STAKE IN SENATE TEST

Fate of Tax Measure Also Hangs on Action of Upper House on President's Veto.

DISABLED VETERANS OBJECT TO BILL

Long Debate on Motion
To Override Rejection Predicted—Battle Will Start Today.

BY THOMAS L. STOKES.

Washington, May 18.—More than the bonus may be at stake when that measure comes up for its final test in the senate this week. President Coolidge's decision on the pending (tax bill is dependent partly upon the fate of the soldier bonus, because of the additional expense involved, it is indicated.

Advisors are telling the president that if the senate overrides the veto on the bonus and that if the principal features of the tax bill—inserted by democrats—are retained, he should disapprove the revenue measure.

Expect Long Debate.

For this reason, administration senators who oppose the bonus are making a vigorous effort to change enough votes to sustain the president's veto. They also are bringing pressure upon the tax conference to rid the tax bill of those features most objectionable to the president, including the Jones corporation tax amendment and that by Senator Norris, of Nebraska, opening income tax returns to full publicity.

The bonus will be called up for action in the senate Monday. Its advocates are prepared to fight against delay by the administration senators who oppose it and who want time to swing votes their way. Senator Curtis, of Kansas, republican whip, looks for debate when the bill is taken up, and said Sunday that a vote might not be reached Monday. Debate may last two or three days.

Curtis is for the bill, and says for that reason he has made no poll of his senate to ascertain its state. Those

SKULL FRACTURE FEARED IN CASE OF MRS. BUTLER

Police Told Car Was Speeding When It Left
Road and Plunged Thru Fence Near Roswell.

TWO PERSONS INJURED IN CRASH OF AUTOS

Collision of Two Machines Is Said To Have Been Caused by Truck
Driven by Negro.

Howard Stone, 23, of 14 Bellemade avenue, was killed, and eight other persons hurt, one seriously, in automobile accidents during Sunday.

Three of the injured were occupants of a machine that crashed through a fence on the Roswell-Alpharetta road and turned over, fatally injuring Stone.

They were Ethel Willis, of Belton; Mrs. Annie Mae Butler, 22, of Luckie street, and Jess Wallace, who lives on the "Crooked Road," near the Howell Mill road.

Mrs. Butler badly hurt. Mrs. Butler is being examined by surgeons at the Grady hospital for a possible fracture of the skull. She is also thought to have been hurt internally.

Wallace and Miss Willis escaped with minor cuts and bruises, doctors reported.

The automobile, which is reported to have been speeding, left the road and ran through a fence into a field, where it overturned, according to Mrs. Butler. Stone was pinned beneath the wreckage and crushed to death.

Mrs. Butler could not give the cause of the accident and the police have not been able to question the other two occupants of the car.

Officers had not completed their investigation at a late hour Sunday night. The fatal mishap occurred between Roswell and Alpharetta.

Other Accidents.

He is survived by his mother, Mrs. Fannie Stone, four sisters, Mrs. W. E. Clement, Mrs. L. K. Webb, Mrs. Mary Morris and Mrs. L. T. Merrett; four brothers, W. W., J. C., E. E. and J. J. Stone.

Funeral services will be held at 11 o'clock Tuesday morning from the Midway Methodist church with Hunter & Blanchard, funeral directors, in charge.

Others hurt were Mrs. E. E. Jenkins, 20 Barnes street; Dr. S. L. Baldwin, 278 North Moreland avenue; E. J. Hardy, Peachtree road; Mrs. H. H. Grubb, 24 Dunn street; and a negro boy whose name the police have not learned.

Mrs. Jenkins was hurt by the automobile of D. I. McIntyre, 39 West Sixteenth street. The accident occurred in Fourteenth, near West Peachtree street, according to the report of Captain M. V. Barnett, of the traffic bureau.

A charge of reckless driving was made against McIntyre, who reported to Captain Barnett that the accident was unavoidable, and that Mrs. Jenkins walked into the side of his machine.

Mrs. Jenkins refused to go to a hospital, and is under the care of the family physician at her home.

Dr. Baldwin and Hardy were severely shaken up and bruised in a crash between their machines at Auburn avenue and Jackson street, caused, it was reported, by a heavy motor truck, driven by an unidentified negro, striking the doctor's car and throwing it into Hardy's machine, which was going in the opposite direction. The negro did not stop after the collision, police were told.

Mrs. Grubb was thrown against the top of the automobile in which she was riding when it struck a large hole in the street. The location was not given the police. Mrs. Grubb was badly bruised.

The unidentified negro boy was knocked down at Beckwith and Chestnut streets by a sedan containing three unidentified negroes, which, according to witnesses, was speeding.

The little negro refused to go to hospital and left for home without giving his name.

The negroes in the sedan are reported by witnesses to have stopped their machine and cursed the boy for getting in their way, not offering any assistance.

WOMAN IS NAMED TAX COLLECTOR IN BUTTS COUNTY

The term will expire on the first of next January. She is one of the few women in Georgia to hold the office of tax collector.

FORMER RAILWAY OFFICIAL JAILED

Macon, Ga., May 18.—James Leonard, former cashier of the Southern railway freight office, is in jail here charged with being a party to the embezzlement of $35,370.04 from the Southern railway.

Jointly named in the indictment under which the arrest was made is Howard L. Jones, formerly chief clerk in the Southern railway shops in this city. Jones disappeared last February.

Leonard gave up his position with the Southern railway last July. He recently took a position with the Atlanta, Birmingham & Atlantic railway, and was arrested in Atlanta on Saturday afternoon and brought here last night.

Auditors have been at work on the books of the Southern railway here for several months.

Charge Payrolls Padded. It is charged that fictitious names were added to payrolls at the Southern shops here, and that Leonard protected Jones in turning the checks into cash, which is alleged to have been converted to his own use.

After Leonard left the service, the alleged method of obtaining cash changed from padding of payrolls to manipulating of personal injury vouchers at the shops, which came to an end last February with a number of dismissions and the disappearance of Jones, who was chief clerk and several other employees.

Jones, who is said to have been the master mind in the embezzling schemes, could not manipulate payrolls without the cooperation of Leonard. The auditors failed to find any irregularities in these accounts when Leonard left, but manipulations at the shop began to show up immediately after his departure.

The manipulations were on personal injury items, in which an injured man would be carried on the payrolls by the chief clerk, at full wages, for releases damage claims for $50 to $100. The victim did not get the money, but this found its way into the pockets of Jones, it is alleged.

Jones Drops From Sight. The manipulations of the personal injury vouchers were disclosed last February when Jones disappeared. He was 34 years of age and several other employees of the shops dropped out of sight at the same time, and the Southern railway relieved J. G. Cain as master mechanic, placing H. R. Stubbs in charge. Cain obtained warrants for the arrest of Jones and others in connection with the embezzlement, asserting that he was not in any way implicated in the embezzlements, and that he has had great confidence in his chief clerk up to the time of the disclosures.

Where Memorial Tablet to Memory Of Woodrow Wilson Will Be Unveiled

This picture represents the little park in "Morningside," where a beautiful memorial tablet in bronze will be unveiled next Sunday afternoon, under the auspices of the Atlanta Woman's club. An elm tree also will be planted upon this spot in memory of the late ex-president. The artists' drawing shows the arrangement of crepe myrtle and elm trees that alternate for two miles along the beautiful boulevard traversing this residence district.

A patriotic event of unusual interest to Atlanta will be the unveiling of a beautiful memorial tablet and the planting of an elm tree in memory of Woodrow Wilson, late ex-president of the United States, which is to be conducted under the auspices of the Atlanta Woman's club at 4 o'clock next Sunday afternoon in Morningside, a beautiful subdivision recently opened in Atlanta's north-side residence district.

A handsome bronze memorial tablet, bearing ex-President Wilson's name and a tribute to his memory will be unveiled by Mrs. William Jackson Smith, 84 years of age, and mother of J. R. Smith, of the Smith & Rankin Realty company, proprietors of Morningside, and by Dr. E. L. Connolly, 56 years of age, one of Atlanta's pioneer citizens who has taken part in many of the large civic developments of this city. Dr. Connolly and Mrs. Smith will take part in planting the elm.

Mrs. Alonzo Richardson, president of the Woman's club, Sunday night stated that all in Atlanta have been invited to attend, and in addition to speakers of both local and national note, there will be musical and other features that will add greatly to the impressiveness of the occasion.

Planting of the elm tree is to be the initial feature of a movement to whiten legislation that will prescribe uniform planting of ornamental trees in Atlanta's many subdivisions and residence sections. This movement is expected to develop this city into one of the most beautiful in the entire world.

"The Wilson tree," said Mrs. Richardson, "is to be planted on a stop near Mayner."

Two men dying in auto crash.

Jacksonville, Fla., May 18.—Fred Redding, 26, son of W. A. Redding, vice-president of the Florida National bank, was fatally injured, and Robert O'Brien, 22, son of William O'Brien, millionaire lumberman of St. Paul, Minn., with interests here, is believed to be dying as the result of an automobile accident today on the beach near Mayner.

The automobile, said to have been driven at a high rate of speed by O'Brien, crashed into the partly submerged end of a tree. The car, according to witnesses, catapulted, turning over and three times. One of the men was hurled from the car on the first turn, and the other on the second. The car came to a stop nearly 100 feet from the tree. Redding died a few minutes after the accident.

Attending physicians tonight held out little hope for O'Brien's recovery. He was said to have sustained two fractures of the neck, a broken shoulder blade, and concussion of the spine and brain. Physicians believed he also suffered internal injuries.

General Bentwell refused to accept the sword of Captain Phelps. After the retreat from Kentucky, Captain Phelps was in charge of the Andersonville prison where hundreds of guards and Union prisoners were starved to death for the lack of food. He spent his own money feeding Union prisoners.

Captain Phelps participated in many battles of the Civil war. Some of his engagements were the battles of Perryville, Ky.; Harrodsburg, Ky.; and Richmond, Ky. He was honorably discharged in April, 1862.

In Brokerage Business. Captain Phelps came to Atlanta many years ago and entered the brokerage business, in which he made a decided success. His health breaking he was compelled to abandon his business and retire from active business life. On June 18, 1923, he entered the Confederate Soldiers' home, where he died.

He was awarded a hero medal by the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan in 1898. He was very active in the Gideon Association of Atlanta and was a Scottish Rite Mason.

TWO MEN DYING IN AUTO CRASH

Jacksonville, Fla., May 18.—Fred Redding, 26, son of W. A. Redding, vice-president of the Florida National bank, was fatally injured, and Robert O'Brien, 22, son of William O'Brien, millionaire lumberman of St. Paul, Minn., with interests here, is believed to be dying as the result of an automobile accident today on the beach near Mayner.

The automobile, said to have been driven at a high rate of speed by O'Brien, crashed into the partly submerged end of a tree. The car, according to witnesses, catapulted, turning over and three times. One of the men was hurled from the car on the first turn, and the other on the second. The car came to a stop nearly 100 feet from the tree. Redding died a few minutes after the accident.

Attending physicians tonight held out little hope for O'Brien's recovery. He was said to have sustained two fractures of the neck, a broken shoulder blade, and concussion of the spine and brain. Physicians believed he also suffered internal injuries.

Keeps His Sword.

General Bentwell refused to accept the sword of Captain Phelps. After the retreat from Kentucky, Captain Phelps was in charge of the Andersonville prison where hundreds of guards and Union prisoners were starved to death for the lack of food. He spent his own money feeding Union prisoners.

Captain Phelps participated in many battles of the Civil war. Some of his engagements were the battles of Perryville, Ky.; Harrodsburg, Ky.; and Richmond, Ky. He was honorably discharged in April, 1862.

In Brokerage Business. Captain Phelps came to Atlanta many years ago and entered the brokerage business, in which he made a decided success. His health breaking he was compelled to abandon his business and retire from active business life. On June 18, 1923, he entered the Confederate Soldiers' home, where he died.

MRS. SMITH DIES FROM PNEUMONIA

New York, May 18.—Mrs. Catherine Smith, mother of Governor Smith, who has been ill for several weeks with pneumonia, died at 6:20 tonight at the home of her daughter in Brooklyn.

Governor Smith was not with his mother when she died. He was reached at Abacon, N. J., by telephone and left there immediately for Brooklyn.

Mrs. Smith took a sudden turn for the worse this afternoon. Earlier in the day she had seemed to be improving.

Mrs. Smith was born on the Lower East Side, 72 years ago. She spent her girlhood, married and raised her family there. Her husband, Alfred Emanuel Smith, died in 1886, when she was 34 years of age. The widow continued to live in the neighborhood until 1902 when she crossed the bridge to live in Brooklyn, with daughter, Mary, the wife of John John J. Glynn. The success of her son in public life was a source of the greatest pride to Mrs. Smith. A deep bond of attachment existed between them.

The governor for many years made it a point to visit his mother on Sundays when she used to cook an old-fashioned dinner for him.

Mrs. Smith was a devout Catholic and during much of her last illness, having gone away for a short rest at Abacon, when his mother showed strong signs of returning health.

Besides the governor and Mrs. Glynn she survived by twelve grandchildren and three great-grandchildren. Five of the grandchildren are the sons and daughters of the governor.

around a curve in the road and smashed into the other. O'Daniel, seeing that a crash was unavoidable, jumped, striking his head against a cross-tree. He was picked up a few feet behind the train after the wreck, terribly injured. His fireman and other members of the crew riding in the cab sustained only minor injuries.

Coch as Juggernaut.

The baggage coach went through the first passenger car like a juggernaut, splintering it and bringing instant death to six of the eight persons riding in the forward end. The brakeman, George Meador, and another brakeman sitting in the seat beside him were mashed to a pulp. The fragments of their torn bodies were visible through the crevices in the walls of the car for hours after the crash.

The locomotives of the two trains were not badly battered. The pilots were smashed in and the front end of both boilers slightly battered. The express train suffered but little, save for the fifth car, a wooden car sandwiched in between heavy steel cars, which was crumpled up and fell to pieces. The rest of the train was uninjured.

Reaching the door, he placed the muzzle of the pistol over his heart and fired, sinking to the floor. He lived about 30 minutes after the shooting.

Suffering from a complete nervous breakdown, Mrs. Mauldin is at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Morgan. Both stated that they would see the little boy was well taken care of and given every opportunity in life within their power.

Baptist Convention Sidelights

BY DR. THOMAS M. ELLIOTT

Dr. W. B. Bagby, for 43 years a missionary in Brazil, enjoys an unusual distinction, in that he baptized John the Baptist's mother. It comes about this way: Dr. Bagby's first convert in Brazil was a man by the name of John the Baptist. After receiving John into the church, the mother soon followed her son, and came to Dr. Bagby for baptism.

Dixon Quite Epigrammatic.
Dr. A. C. Dixon, of Baltimore, speaks in epigrams. After saying that the time had come for the world to study modern scholarship through the light of the Bible, rather than study the Bible through the light of modern scholarship, he remarked that science has made the world a neighborhood; but that Christianity is the only force that can make the world a neighborhood.

A Tri-State Delegate.
Rev. J. V. Atkinson claims three states as his place of residence. He is a North Carolinian by birth, a South Carolinian by adoption, and a Georgia Cracker by accident.

Baptists Promote Publicity.
Baptist people realize the value of the press and printer's ink. The convention is not only equipped with a half-million dollar book and publishing exhibit, which is doing a tremendous business during the session, but it also has commanded every available new agency to give forth to the world a record of their doings. Eighteen editors with their reporters are on hand to chronicle the proceedings for the church papers, and large space is provided for reporters' reports.

resenting the daily press and news agencies. Frank L. Burkhalter, of Nashville, is director of publicity. He issues daily a four-page bulletin of the convention's deliberations.

Had to preach Hell Fire.
The Mayview, Kentucky, Baptist pastor announced to his congregation recently that he would preach that night on hell fire and damnation. Explaining the reason for the sermon he found that old church records revealed that the title to the land on which the church stands contain the provision that the ground is given for a Baptist church so long as the ministers shall preach hell, fire and damnation.

Leghorns to Enter the Ministry.
A Louisiana Baptist farmer, wishing to make a contribution to the cause for the worn-out preachers of the denomination, announced that he had 1,000 white leghorn chickens, and that he wanted to put 900 of them into the fund for the retired preachers.

Gospel Near Washington.
Rev. H. H. Nicoll, of Maryland, said he conducted a funeral service within 25 miles of Washington city, and that 14 persons were in the congregation that had never before heard the gospel preached. Of the number one was a grown man, while the others were children. Mr. Nicoll stated that he later received four of the number into one of his churches. Wanted Religious Churches.
Evangelist E. F. Dudley, of Portsmouth, expressed his opinion that an outstanding need of the Baptist denomination is for the churches to be filled with regenerated believers. His utterance to that effect, and his condemnation of worldliness in the church, was greeted with hundreds of solemn amens.

Crick in Dr. Gray's Neck.
Dr. E. D. Gray, of the home mission board, said he had a crick in his neck, caused by constant effort in looking forward to see in what way the Southern Methodists were leading in church endeavor. Dr. Gray asked that he be relieved of the crick by being allowed to promote the work of his board as that might be able to look back and beckon to the Methodists to come on.

Atlanta Boy Goes to Sea.
Captain Karl Frost, superintendent of the seamen's mission, at Jacksonville, said a 14-year-old Atlanta boy came to him wanting to become a sailor. Asked why a boy so young should want to go to sea, the Atlanta lad replied: "I see that Uncle Sam wants men to man the ships, and I propose to be one of the number."

3,000 Baptisms in One Day.
Reports of foreign mission work revealed that in one day in Russia missionaries had baptized 3,000 persons a one community.

Quick Response to Appeal.
While Dr. W. B. Bagby, missionary to Brazil, was appealing for funds to build a church in a South American city, $100,000 was sent up to the platform and placed in his hands.

Foreigners More Liberal.
Dr. J. E. Love, secretary of the foreign missions board, reported that Argentine foreign converts are more liberal than Americans. He said contributions reported are as follows: Americans, $10; the Argentine, $20; Brazil, $10; Italy, $5; Chile, $5; Japan, $4.01; Mexico, $4.43; and Africa, $1.15.

Level-Headed President.
When Dr. John J. Hurt, of Tennessee, was nominating Dr. George W. McDaniel, of Virginia, for president of the convention, he remarked: "He is so level-headed that if a drop of water were placed on his head it would remain motionless, undisturbed by the wind or rain."

From 600 to 6,000.
When the Southern Baptist convention met in Atlanta, 1925, 600 delegates were held in the old First Baptist church, where the federal building now stands. Delegates to that session numbered fewer than 600, and did not more than half fill the church auditorium. The number of registered delegates to this convention is 6,000.

Veteran Preachers Saluted.
A touching incident of Saturday night session occurred when the president of the convention, all members of the convention who had been members for fifty years or more, and the audience rose to greet them. The chautauque aged ministers who responded were Dr. A. J. Holt, of Florida; Dr. W. W. Landrum, of Kentucky; Dr. C. E. Dargatzis, of Tennessee; Dr. C. N. Donahoe, of Georgia; Dr. R. T. Hanks, of Texas; Dr. C. Stubbfield, of Oklahoma; and Dr. N. C. Denison, of Arkansas. Dr. Denison, who was ordained a minister 67 years ago and had been baptized by the father of B. H. Carroll.

DUBLIN SCHOOLS CLOSE 1924 TERM MAY 30

Dublin, Ga., May 18.—(Special).—Dublin schools will close the 1923-24 term May 30 when 51 diplomas will be delivered to members of the graduating class. This is one of the largest classes ever sent out from the local system.

The annual commencement sermon will be delivered Sunday, May 23, by Rev. J. C. G. Brooks, pastor of the First Methodist church. J. F. Hart will deliver the literary address May 30.

A comparison of the averages of the members of the senior class for the year's work shows that Miss Margaret Burrows claims first honor and Miss Mary Radford takes second. There was only one-half point difference in the grades of these two students.

CAROLINA JURIST STRICKEN, MAY DIE

Glowing Tribute Paid to Atlanta Spirit by Pastor

BY DR. THOMAS M. ELLIOTT

Applause by the immense congregation factored the glowing and eloquent tribute to the spirit of Atlanta by Dr. George W. Truett, of Dallas, in the opening remarks of his sermon at the Auditorium Sunday afternoon.

Dr. Truett was expressing the pleasure of the Baptists in coming again to Atlanta, where vivid memories cluster of victories won in other days in the large enterprises of the city. He said that the Atlanta spirit was the great spirit of this city, of its matchless hospitality and dauntless courage. He related the story of Charles M. Sheldon, who was called upon at a banquet to respond to a toast, "What Makes a City Great and Strong?" The response was written in rhyme, and that was dedicated to be sung by Dr. Truett. The poem quoted is as follows:

What makes a city great and strong?
Not architecture's graceful strength,
Nor factories' extended length.
But men who see the civic wrong
And give their lives to make it right
And turn its darkness into light.

What makes a city full of power?
Not wealth's display, nor titled name,
Nor fashion's loudly boasted claim;
But women rich in virtue's power,
Whose homes, though humble, still
Are great.

Because of service to the state.
What makes a city men can love?
Not things that charm the outward sense,
Nor gross display of opulence;
But righteousness which cannot remove,
And truth that faces civic fraud
And smites it in the name of God.

This is the city that shall stand
A light upon the nation's bill
A voice that evil cannot still
A source of blessing to the land:
It's saintly, not brick, not stone, nor wood,
But justice, love and brotherhood.

"That," said Dr. Truett, "is Atlanta."
Information was given Sunday afternoon that Atlanta has more Baptist churches than any city in the world. Richmond, Va., ranks second.

CHOPS RIVAL TO DEATH Peachtree Place Neighborhood Stirred by Killing.

Residents of Peachtree place were stirred Sunday by a due to death between two negroes, rivals for the hand of Irene Greene, which occurred in the rear of one of the homes on that fashionable street. The victim was Will Lindsay, an assistant John Rice, according to police who are searching for him. The slain man was 28 years of age. When the police arrived on the scene there was no need for a doctor. The wielder of the axe had cut through the door of the girls' room, and had used as a chopping block a wooden chair. Irene, who was taken to police station as a witness, was unconcerned over the affair. All she had to say was that Rice hadn't treated her right and that Lindsay was a far more liberal spender.

MORE THAN BONUS WILL BE AT STAKE Continued From First Page.

who oppose it still are hopeful that the president will be sustained. They are counting on a switch such as took place after Harding had vetoed the earlier bonus bill. Bonus advocates claim that the bill will be re-passed, though they look for several senators to change.

If the entire membership were present on the vote, it would take 33 votes to uphold the president. It is estimated that not more than 90 will be on hand. If 90 were present, 31 votes would be required. If only 81 were voting, as on the Bureau bill veto, 28 would be necessary.

Only 17 voted against the bill before. There were four senators absent who were paired against it. This would make 33 votes certain. Opponents of the bill say that three other votes have been obtained. Senators Sterling, of South Dakota; Leves, of New Hampshire; and Cameron, of Arizona. Both Sterling and Cameron admitted Sunday that they were undecided, though they voted for the bill before. Cameron was one of those who switched after the Harding veto.

There are three others being pressed who may swing over, Col. of Rhode Island; McKinley, of Illinois; and Warren, of Wyoming. McKinley said Sunday that he had not decided how he would vote. Warren voted for this bonus bill after opposing all others, and may follow the president.

Sad Awakening Promised.
Provided these six switched, there would be 27 votes against the bill, which might be enough to sustain the president, if many senators were absent. Others may change. Because of the strong message of the president, no prediction of the senate's action is possible. Bonus advocates say that 24 is the maximum opposition the bill will meet.

CHURCH-SATE DIVORCE URGED

met in special session to hear discussions of the large programs of work instituted by the Southern Baptist denomination by Doctors Truett and Dodd. Three-fourths of the congregation were seated 40 minutes before the hour's exercises were scheduled to begin, and 20 minutes before the time there was not a vacant seat to be had. A thousand persons denied admittance sent in a petition that a speaker be sent out to address them. Dr. M. P. Hunt, of Louisville, was dispatched for that purpose. He delivered his address from the front steps of the auditorium building.

An hour was spent in singing old-time religious hymns before any of the speakers were presented. Special appeals were interspersed between the songs.

Special Memorial.
R. H. Coleman, Dallas, was director of the song service. As a special memorial to the late Dr. J. A. Gambrell, former president of the convention, the hymn, "Higher Ground," was sung. A quartet of singers representing the home mission board and the foreign mission board, Messrs. S. J. Spencer, W. P. Martin, W. J. Work and John D. Hoffman, Mrs. O. D. Culpepper, of Atlanta, sang "If I Could Sing the Glory" and "There'll Be No Shadows." Mr. Butler sang as an encore "The Lord of the Promised Land." Dr. R. S. Scarborough, director-general of the 75-million campaign, presiding at the auditorium meeting, asked all persons present who lived outside Atlanta to stand. Three-fourths of the people rose. He then asked all Atlanta people to stand, and 2,000 rose. He further asked all Baptist ministers to stand, and 1,000 responded. Each one pledged himself in his revival meetings this summer to give special attention to emphasizing the special campaigns to be made within the coming months.

Dr. M. E. Wood, of Shreveport, chairman of the $7,500,000 campaign which is to be made in December, spoke of that work, and said the Southern Baptist movement, he never intended to go forward, and go forward together. He stressed the unity of the forces in the ranks of the denomination.

He is of the belief that the great host of Southern Baptists had not accomplished more, and urged that host of numbers be laid aside, and that the denomination do something worthy of the Bible plan of finances, asserting that the true test of character is the use one makes of his money.

He thought the church's lack of power today is due to the fact that resources had not been properly used. Baptists of One Mind.

Dr. Dodd stressed the belief that Baptists are of one mind relative to the great tasks now awaiting performance. He reviewed the splendid achievements of the 75-million campaign, and said they were of such proportions as to be startling. He declared that the greatest question now is that of stewardship, and that the church should be waiting for the speaker, and he referred to Home Jerusalem and other cities that had failed in stewardship, and expressed his fears for a similar fate for America if she should prove of like spirit. He urged his auditors that the world's only hope lies in the Christian religion, he appealed in all earnestness that Southern Baptists gladly welcome the larger call to service, go to prayer morning, noon and night, and be glad to pay the price that the reward might be gained. He called upon one and all to dedicate lives, go forward with great courage, rededication all the way.

lar expressions of hospitality were given in Lumpkin, Bluffton and Blakely.

The first division on the tour rolled into Panama City at 11 o'clock this morning, having completed the 1,000-mile journey in about three hours. The second squadron, preceded by the Oakland pathfinder, arrived at 4 o'clock this afternoon, making the run from Oakland in about eight hours. The Oakland, which has been running like a top all the way from Atlanta, set a steady pace over the splendid road which traverses five Cotton States to the Gulf. This stretch had been preceded by a few miles of exceedingly rough going over new construction, but no matter how sudden the rut or how choppy the way, there was never a squeak from the splendidly constructed Fisher body on the Oakland pathfinder.

Many of the autos on the trip are closed cars, and the travelers have been keenly interested to note how well adapted the closed type car is to cross-country work. The closed cars had no difficulty in equalling the open machines when it came to running, and proved superior when it came to a question of comfort. Occupants of the closed cars reached Panama City almost as free from dust as though they had been on a mere jaunt out Peachtree street.

duction of the tariff taxes which are levied on the people and which constitute a distinct and outstanding party political issue. I believe that the so-called "soldiers' adjusted compensation bill," commonly known as the "bonus," will increase our taxes and therefore should not be enacted. I favor the immediate elimination of the useless bureaus of the government and the reduction of the enormous number of useless federal employees.

Oppose Ku Klux Klan.
Ku Klux Klan: You cannot mix Americanism and klanism. Any person who favors the klan does so in open opposition to the constitution, which is the foundation rock upon which our government is built.

The presidency: I favor a constitutional amendment limiting the term of office of the president to one term of six or seven years.

Law enforcement: I favor the vigorous enforcement by the executive department of the United States, and hold that no man is qualified to take the oath of office as president who would hesitate for an instant in the performance of that duty.

Tax Reduction Necessary.
The need for immediate tax reduction is vital. How far we can carry the burden of present taxation, no

Constitution of the United States.

The instrument embodying the principles upon which the government of the American republic is conducted.

Have you ever read this wonderful document? When was it adopted and under what circumstances? What is the preamble? How many articles and how many amendments does it contain?

All this information, as well as the history of hundreds of patriotic Americans who helped to found our government, and of hundreds of other distinguished ones who have helped guide the ship of State from its beginning down to the present day, are found in Adair's New Encyclopedia, which is being distributed by this paper to its readers at a mere nominal expense.

one can forestall. But the fact remains that we are fast approaching the danger point. We have reached a point where we must call a halt on any further increase in taxation or extension of national credit.

The tariff is a tax burden, no matter what specious arguments are used to the contrary. The tariff tax benefits the few at the expense of all the rest. There should be a material reduction in this form of "favored industries' tax."

Oppose Soldier Bonus.
Tax reduction and the bonus are contradictory terms. If we have one, we cannot have the other. Our soldiers have already received in compensation, outside their statutory pay, in the neighborhood of $3,000,000,000—in five short years. The ultimate cost of a bonus will be, according to those who have examined carefully into the matter, between $4,000,000,000 and $5,000,000,000. From every standpoint, I believe that it would be most unfortunate to put this additional burden on our taxpayers.

Bureaucracy Grows.
Our taxpayers are burdened with a rapidly growing form of national peril—a bureaucracy in the shape of federal employees. According to the latest figures of the civil service commission, we have at present 64,559 employees in the District of Columbia, and 487,547 additional employees in the nation at large—a total of 548,505—all civilians employed by the federal government. It is a veritable, and expensive, host, yet at every session of congress it is proposed to add to the already swollen functions of the government further activities, to create more bureaus, and to increase the already stupendous array of civilians on the federal payroll.

The Klan Menace.
Among the evils following in the train of war has come about a certain disregard for the law, and the amounting to what might be termed rebellion against the law in general. There is even an organized defiance against some of the most sacred guarantees of the constitution, such as trial by jury, protection of the home, freedom of religious worship and the protection of property. These fundamental warranties of liberty must necessarily fail when an unrestrained mob directs the affairs of men instead of even-handed justice proceeding from courts of law.

It is plain and unmistakable duty of every decent citizen to throw the weight of his disapproval against flagrant violators of the law, in whatever garb they may be found. Would Rewrite Plank.
I favor the reaffirming of the democratic platform of 1850, which pronounced against the Know-Nothingism of that era—and the Ku Klux Klan is the Know-Nothing Klan of today—in which platform the final paragraph read:

"Resolved, that the foundation of the union of states . . . is built upon entire freedom in matters of religious concernment, and no respect of persons in regard to rank or place of birth. Hence a political crusade in the nineteenth century, and in the United States of America, against Catholic and foreign born, is neither justified by the past history nor the future prospects of the country, nor in union with the toleration and enlarged freedom which distinguishes the American form of government."

The Presidency.
We are just recovering from the shock of a tragedy the pathos of which moved the world. A president succumbed to the rigorous actions of his office, striving with an exemplary patience and heroic endurance to carry out the duties of his short four years of office as host of Hercules' labors. Had he been allotted a large space of time, he might have spared his strength and conserved his powers to their fulfillment. An election to the presidency means the sacrifice of perhaps half the term to party demands, which cannot be dispensed with as long as party loyalty exists or party life exerts a binding force.

It is not a mere personal ambition that dominates the president. If he is conscientious and truly imbued with these abstract principles of government for which his party stands, he must more or less recognize his obligations to see them made permanent and abiding for the good of his country. This means that those countless hours of labor and careful study which should be devoted to the high office must be given up to questions of party expediency and political policies—scandal—that the opposite party may not steal a march and plant itself within the breastworks of the capitol at the next election.

Would Stop Maneuvers.
Relieve the newly elected president of his eligibility to another term, and he will cease to be the center of political maneuver. Free your executive from this intolerable yoke about his neck, and you will leave him free to devote all his power and energies to the great masses of the people. The unsettlement of business every four years is entirely too frequent a disturbance of our affairs of trade and traffic. The dangers of a third term are too remote to worry about. The people are too firmly entrenched in their opposition to the thought of it.

The Paramount Issue.
The first and paramount issue, however, is the reduction of all forms of taxes, direct, such as income tax, and indirect, such as the tariff tax. As for our foreign policy—that is already been out by an inexorable logic of events. Our destiny henceforth is unalterably interwoven with the destinies of our sister-nations over the seas.

It is because of blindness to see this and a lack of vision to realize, and of these alone, that a selfish policy of inaction and aloofness is born.

These, in brief, are the leading issues now before the American people, as I see it.

be no dissent from the belief that the nation governed on such a principle would end in the ditch.

This nation is heading for the ditch, and the states in this nation, and the counties in the states, are heading for the ditch, unless the people of business ability and integrity take more interest in public affairs; and administrations, large and small, are thus snatched from the professional politicians, from the "secret manipulations" of political cabalists, and from the crushing machinery of invisible political despotism.

ANOTHER WILD SCHEME.

The farm bloc in congress has extorted a promise that the McNary-Haugen bill will be voted upon before adjournment.

It has been tentatively agreed that congress shall adjourn on June 7, as the republican national convention meets on June 10.

This means that this bill—another political football to be rallied around by demagogues of both parties on the 1924 political gridiron—will be pushed through congress if possible during the jam of the closing days with the aid of a hysterical bloc movement, and without proper consideration of its merits or demerits, or what it really means to the farmers whom it is supposed to relieve.

The fact is a greater political camouflage was never thrown up in congress and, like the republican tariff that was heralded as of such financial promise to the farmers, it not only opens a financial ditch for them to fall into, but it proposes to impose additional price burdens upon essential commodities used by millions of American consumers.

The bill is peculiarly offensive to the south, for while it seeks to fix minimum prices upon farm production, the schedule is confined almost entirely to the major commodities of the western farmers. Wheat and wheat products primarily are the commodities it seeks to "stabilize" with fixed market prices. It does not include cotton, although cotton production, by reason of the boll weevil, is more distressed than wheat production, the embarrassment of which was produced entirely by over-production and by a narrow foreign policy that practically closed European markets to wheat exportation.

Any plan to fix high prices for certain farm products—a tax upon one hundred consumers in proportion to one producer—is bad legislation and is not genuine relief to the producer. It is like treating a suffering patient with a narcotic instead of applying remedial medicines or surgery to reach and eradicate the disease.

The McNary-Haugen bill provides for a corporation of $200,000,000 capital, with authority to obtain credit for $1,000,000,000 additional for the purpose of "buying farm products" and selling them at a profit, the buying to be at fixed prices, which stifles competition and destroys the possibility of even higher markets under the laws of supply and demand.

In other words it simply makes a gigantic commodity trust out of the government, puts it beyond its legitimate functioning into a giant mercantile business, puts the 125,000,000 American consumers into the grip of a federal business octopus and gives the farmer nothing but an opportunity to get further in debt, with no hope of changing market conditions to relieve his distress.

It is a measure as radical as the most radical soviet of Russia could possibly devise. It is a proposal for governmental socialism that is astounding in its analysis. And yet, there are scores of southern members of congress said to be in favor of the measure. It is unbelievable.

What the farmer needs is a lessening of the burdens of taxation; fair open markets at home and abroad for his commodities; the prices of supplies based upon a moderate and not a protective tariff schedule, so long as he must sell his own production abroad in free trade countries; better systems of cooperative marketing; and a general world condition, with the trading amity of nations established that may be conducive to the proper absorption of his production at fair and just prices to him—prices that guarantee a fair profit upon his investments and labors.

The American farmer—the southern farmer particularly—does not want such a law as the McNary-Haugen bill.

"Certain Fool Notions."

The editor of The Lamar Democrat doesn't mind making a ladder, and doesn't mind taking a sign of a man who had carefully read the article. The editor of the paper writes in a recent issue of his paper—

"One three most universally accepted superstitions prove that impressions once formed in the human mind go on for countless generations. This fear of Friday as our unlucky day, the belief that the number thirteen is a certain harbinger of misfortune, and certain folk notions about a cat; especially that if a black cat crosses your path the best thing to do is to go make your will and pick out your pallbearers. Our superstition in regard to Friday is evidently traceable to the fact that it was the day upon which Jesus was crucified. The number thirteen dates back to Christ's last supper, when He and His twelve disciples sat about the board. The nonsense about the cat is evidently older than the tower of Babel, for the sinister spell supposed to be cast by Friday. The ancient Egyptians worshipped the cat, believing the animal had supernatural power. So it is that trivial human impressions, moral or immoral, have a long vista of centuries."

Thirty Years of Cotton in Georgia
BY MARTIN V. CALVIN
Agricultural and Economic Specialist
Georgia Department of Agriculture

One week ago an article, under my signature, appeared in your deservedly popular newspaper. The object in view was to show that, while the cotton boll weevil had caused heavy losses to the state, the latter was very far from being in a truly deplorable condition. The reliable facts and figures, which I presented, were heartening. This I learned from a number of thinking business gentlemen who had carefully read the article.

A few days ago a gentleman requested that I give him information on 30 years of cotton in Georgia along a line he proposed to use in a speech. I immediately complied with his request—all requisite facts being supplied him. Wonderful facts, I assure you, but I can not use them for the reason indicated, but I can and will give you somewhat different but equally valuable information as to cotton during 30 years—1894-1923, both inclusive.

Cotton Is Not Just Cotton.

A doing matter handed to a visiting bishop at a church conference here beautiful bales. The bishop took the bales, dangled it a bit—the babe in the meantime being a bundle of smiles. The bishop handed the bales to the pastor, simply remarking: "Well, it is a baby. I will not permit myself to believe that that was a Georgia bishop."

Cotton is an indispensable product of the South. We will do our duty by continuing to grow it—boll weevil or no boll weevil. The facts which I assembled for my friend carry information which is as gratifying as it is surprising to you.

Thirty years of cotton in Georgia! Why, that's three decades. A comparison of the value of cotton and the total value of property on the state's digest, ten years—1894-1903 will interest you. You know that the digest shows increase in property values year by year; cotton production is also year by year. In order to ascertain the increase in property values, you subtract the total value of the first year from that of the tenth year. In the case of cotton, you may do the same, but to make effective comparison you must take the aggregate value of the crop for the entire ten years. For illustration:

The value of the 10-year crop, 1894-1903, on the basis of price of midland upland in New York city, was $517,193,210; the value of property on the digest, 1908, was $432,003,875—a difference of $114,190,337 or 26.4 per cent in favor of cotton values. This gives you an idea as to the wealth producing character of our great staple crop—cotton.

The true value of the crop of second series of ten years, 1904-1913, New York price, was $1,104,059,978; the amount of property on the digest in 1914, which represents the revaluation between 1904 and 1913, was $723,020,014. Here we find a difference of $381,039,964 or 52.7 per cent in favor of cotton values.

The true value of the crop of the third series of years, 1914-1923, New York prices, $1,693,833,728; the value of the property on the digest in 1923 was $1,024,445,571, which marks the increase between 1914 and 1923. That is, the property listed in 1914—$803,390,196—had grown to be the sum last mentioned. The difference between that amount and the value of the cotton crop of the ten years was $890,443,532 or 65.3 per cent in favor of cotton.

Results of Boll Weevil Years a Study.

Two-fifths of the third series of ten years was controlled by the boll weevil, that is to say, he was in the saddle. He is like the little yeast germ which, at the risk of losing its life, ventures and gets inside the container, whether barrel or can. Once inside, it proves itself to be like "a fly in the precious ointment."

Of the $1,693,833,728 contributed to the wealth of Georgia and the United States, through cotton values at New York prices during the third series of ten years—1914-1923—the five non-weevil years supplied $961,403,683 or 56.8 per cent; the five boll weevil years, in the face of heavy losses, supplied $732,450,045 or 43.2 per cent. Ought not the last section of the foregoing paragraph be to us a presage of victory over the weevil and kindred, as well as approximately kindred evils?

Would you believe that, during the 30 consecutive years, the annual average production of cotton was 1,615,882 bales, that annual average yield per acre was 170 pounds of lint cotton and the annual average price per pound was 14.01 cents? It is a fact.

Paste the slogan, "GEORGIA IS NOT DOWN OR OUT."

BITS OF NEW YORK LIFE
BY O. O. MCINTYRE

New York, May 18.—A page from the diary of a modern Samuel Pepys: Up betimes and donned my new black and white house robe, very brave. Breakfast and then out into town with my wife to Peter's to have her hair trimmed. And Mrs. Rube Goldberg there.

Afterward to Dr. George Dorsey's to meet his bride and C. D. Williams, the illustrator, showed me a picture of myself upon which he had pasted the head of a horse and which did resemble me all laughed, but I could see no similarity at all. Back home and waited at the lift with W. R. H. How can you be so stupid to speak with him but lost courage albeit I am an occasional workman of his. At my scrivening and very dull it was too.

In the evening to Ray's for dinner of my choosing, old fashioned hash and waffles, and Peter and Helen Kyne there and much rag tag and bob-tail about Peter's flat-top peddler. Came also Lillian Lauffer (Beatrice Fairfax) and more foetry. So home and to bed.

In that period which New York calls the "good old days" there were types never seen today. Many were retired bachelors. Many lived in the old Hoffman house. They were up at nine to be off for the harbor's ministrations. This was followed by breakfast at the Ritz and Brower house. In fair weather they strolled up Broadway in the afternoon attired in gray Prince Alberts with top silk hats, and carrying gold watch fobs. Around five they dined in Park's for a cocktail. George C. Boldt, who later became proprietor of the Waldorf, was the headwaiter there. Then came dinner in the window of Delmonico's on lower Fifth avenue. These men knew how to enjoy life to the fullest. They drank and smoked moderately. They were petted and pampered and had stage doors were unknown to them. They collected rare volumes and attended opera.

New York brings about some quick changes. In a raid on a Green-which Village coffee shop they found a very worldly looking girl who wore a sombrero and a scarlet blouse. She puffed lazily at a cigarette and might have posed as a sort of she-sheik. At the police station her worldly veneer broke in a flood of tears. She had only been in New York 21 days and before that had not been beyond the limits of a village of 2,000 souls in West Virginia.

In a like manner excitement dries up quickly here. I chanced to be walking along Central Park West one evening recently. A horse flung a rider on the park bridge path across the street. The rider was one of the biggest railroad executives in America and he was instantly killed. A big crowd collected as he was carried for the rush to the hospital, but in ten minutes there was nothing to indicate anything out of the usual had happened in the vicinity.

A young man and a girl within the space of two weeks committed suicide in New York because they loved each other. The young man was a student in a corporation. His future was bright. The girl was to have married a wealthy business man. To him she was the most wonderful creature in the history of mankind was that of Leonardo da Vinci. He was a "lore child." He knew it but carried on.

Where in the Bible are people commanded not to eat the flesh of swine? Why was this?

Deut. 14:15 forbids it. No other reason for the command to abstain from swine's flesh is given in the law of Moses, beyond the general one that swine is unclean and that as food which did not literally fulfill the terms of the definition of a "clean animal," namely, that it was to be a cloven footed ruminant. It is, however, because of this definition that swine have influenced Moses in his prohibition of swine's flesh as it is generally believed that its use in hot countries is liable to induce skin disorders; hence in a people liable to leprosy, the necessity for the observance of a strict rule.

WHY YAWN?

Why do people yawn? asks a correspondent, who goes on to say: "I have spells of yawning and my throat is so stretched that it seems at times as though I will suffocate. It can't be lack of sleep, for I get more than enough sleep."

Oxygen hunger.

So the desire comes on when you are fatigued, when the room is overheated or overcrowded and the air is foul, when your breathing grows more shallow from boredom or inactivity, or when you are tired and your exercise great care and ingenuity about avoiding work, honest muscular exertion, suffer from a sort of chronic under-oxygenation and are therefore unduly fatigued and yawning and unduly susceptible to the influence of example or imitation.

A spectator at the ball game is often constrained to yawn. Seldom, however, do you see a player yawning. He is getting the oxygen which the spectator, a sedentary person, probably ought to have. Exercise increases the absorption of oxygen in the body; watching other folks exercise will not do so. Stimulation, even though it be artificial, temporarily increases the absorption of oxygen, but the effect is very temporary indeed and not worth considering in actual practice. The tired business man—or woman—does not need an evening at the vaudeville house as much as a few miles of oxygen on the horizon. Fresh air, as everybody knows, contains plenty of oxygen for anybody who will trouble to go out and help himself.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Pernicious Anemia.

The doctor pronounced my case pernicious anemia. Is that just an evasive term like nervous breakdown? (Mrs. H. G.)

Answer.—Pernicious anemia is one of the essential forms of anemia, and the cause has not been discovered.

Henna.

Is the use of a pure henna injurious to the hair? I use it two or three times a year. (M. L. H.)

Answer.—Henna is a plant from Persia and India. The leaves are dried and powdered, and a tea made from them for staining the skin and hair—common practice in those countries. The dye is also used to stain wood imitation mahogany. So far as I know, it is harmless as a hair dye.

Vaccination.

Can a vaccinated person get the smallpox? Can a person get smallpox more than once? One doctor said vaccination protects for life; another said it protects for only seven years, and in proof of his contention he showed that persons could be successfully revaccinated after seven years and some persons who have had smallpox can be vaccinated after seven years. (Miss E. L. E.)

Answer.—The immunity conferred by an attack of smallpox is relative, not absolute, and possibly one could have a second attack. The immunity to smallpox derived from vaccination is also relative. No one knows just how long it lasts. To assume it lasts "seven years" smacks of superstition—the superstition that keeps some poor persons miserable with the itch for seven years, because they have been told it is "seven year" itch. While the cause of the accident is not known definitely, it is thought that a break in the steering apparatus was responsible for Christopher losing control of the machine. Although he was traveling at a slow rate of speed at the time, he was unable to stop the car in time to prevent the crash.

He was returning home from a short trip in the country when the accident happened.

He is survived by his widow and several children. The body was taken to his home in Chestatee, and funeral arrangements will be announced later.

BEER AND LARGE STILL SEIZED NEAR AUSTELL

Austell, Ga., May 18.—(Special.)—Revenue Officer C. C. Coil, with several deputies from Marietta, early this morning seized a moonshine still with a capacity of 150 gallons, and destroyed eight hogheads of beer found near the still, which was located on a farm between Austell and Mableton.

Judging from appearances, the still had been in operation for some time. Officer Coil states that the operators of the still are known, but no arrests have been made yet.

H. H. Elders Issues Platform In Campaign for Governor

Repeal of the tax equalization law, limitation of city and county taxes to fifteen mills by constitutional amendment, opposition to "any bond issue for roads or any other purpose," and radical changes in the various courts of justice of the state, are embodied in the platform of H. H. Elders, of Hedgesville, candidate for the democratic nomination for governor, which was made public Sunday.

Mr. Elders, representative in the state legislature from Tattnall county, declared that the chief "plank" in his platform on which he will make the race for the office of chief executive of the state will be "economy and tax reduction."

He advocates the levy of a "real inheritance tax and luxury tax" to take the place of the ad valorem tax of five mills for state purposes, which he claims is "out of date and must be taken off our taxpayers." He also stated that "the tax levy for education should be by the county and limited to just enough to run our schools, when added to state aid funds." His platform opposes an income tax.

Favors School Changes. Election of the county boards of education and the conversion of the state school fund into an "equalization school fund, so that the children of all counties may have the same opportunities," are favored by Mr. Elders, according to his platform.

Declaring that he is opposed to "any bond issue for roads or any other purpose," Mr. Elders stated that "in road building we must pay as we go."

As to the courts, he says: "There should not be three classes of courts; justice courts, superior courts and the supreme court. We must enlarge the jurisdiction of our justice courts, abolish our city and county courts, and combine the court of appeals with the supreme court and have a civil and criminal division of the supreme court."

Elders' Platform. Mr. Elders' platform, in full, was announced as follows:

Ninety per cent of our people must be relieved from tax burdens and Georgia must have a better day, and our taxing system must be stabilized so that outside capital will flow into the state. To that end I take as my tests: "Economy and Tax Reduction." Every useless job must be abolished, duplication by different departments of the state stopped, and every wasted dollar saved. The details of this program will be explained during the campaign.

Taxation. The ad valorem tax of 5 mills for state purposes must be taken off our taxpayers. It is out of date. That will save $5,000,000 to our taxpayers. One-half of this can be supplied by a real inheritance tax, the only tax that cannot be passed on to the consumer, and the other one-half can be supplied by a luxury tax, a tax that cannot be passed on to the poor consumer.

The county tax must be limited, not to exceed fifteen (15) mills, and this written into our constitution.

The city tax rate must be limited, not to exceed fifteen mills, and this written into our constitution.

The tax levy for education should be by the county, and limited to just enough to run the schools when added to state aid.

"World Stabilize Tax Law." The above tax program would stabilize our tax system, and bring relief to 90 per cent of our people, and cause untold millions to come into our state to develop our resources. The state of Georgia to follow North Carolina and reclaim her place as the foremost state of the south.

I am opposed to an income tax, for it is not needed, and wealth needs a rest from taxation.

Education. I have stood for ten years to develop our resources. The state of Georgia to follow North Carolina and reclaim her place as the foremost state of the south.

The county board of education should be elected by the people, for they now have tax levying powers.

The county should be a unit of education and every child should have an equal opportunity in life, with at least one high school in every rural county in Georgia.

Public Roads. My next year we will be at $4,000,000. Some of our roads are in a state of ruin. I am opposed to any bond issue for roads or for any other purpose. I believe we must pay as we go, build permanent roads and waste no money on the job.

The $400 car when sold by the state motor license tax as a $4,000 car. We must lift this tax burden off the poor man.

Courts: There should not be but three classes of courts: justice courts, superior courts and the supreme court. We must enlarge the jurisdiction of our justice courts, abolish our city and county courts, and combine the court of appeals with the supreme court and have a civil and criminal division of the supreme court.

I will not sign any appropriation bill until I have approved the tax act and I will not sign tax acts unless they afford relief to our suffering people.

I will stand for the rigid enforcement of all laws by the solemn judgments of our courts and not otherwise must any attempt to execute the law.

Freedom of speech and of the press must be maintained at any cost.

No sect, faction, clique or clan should run the government's office. If elected to this high office, I will know how to say "yes" to my country and "no" to my friends when he is wrong.

The spirit of civic righteousness must be brought into our politics and into the affairs of our state in an effort to approach the spirit of divine righteousness as lived by our Christian citizens.

No political ringer, ring politician or "live head" need call at my residence. As I am a poor man, and I will not oblige myself to a crook for the governor's office. I favor putting counter officers on who are in the large cities, but not in the rural counties.

Mr. Elders declared that he expects to campaign in every county in the state between now and the date of the election. The state primary will be held September 10, it is stated.

Although Mr. Elders is the only candidate who has made a formal announcement, Governor Walker will, it is known here, be a candidate for reelection, and George H. Cresswell, president of the state senate, is also expected to enter the race.

Weird Ceremonial In Wilds of India Seen by Atlantan

Weird ceremonies of superstitious natives of India, and interesting pictures of happenings in that far-away country are revealed in letters from Cabell Hopkins, young Atlantan, now located in Puduchottai, India, to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Linton Hopkins, 120 East Seventh street.

Young Hopkins graduated from Princeton in 1923 and immediately accepted a position with a large American corporation. He was transferred to foreign service soon after accepting the position and has been stationed in India for several months.

Accounts of a visit to a ceremonial in which more than 100,000 natives participated, are told in a recent letter to his mother. Extracts from the letter follow:

"Puduchottai, India, April 8, 1924."

"This has been by far the most interesting trip I have taken. I arrived in Arantangi yesterday morning and as the railroad ends there came up to Puduchottai by motor. This is the first time I have been in the interior—that is the first time I have left the railroad. Although this is only 25 miles from Arantangi the natives here are entirely different and much more civilized. At this time every year they have a 'car festival,' which lasts about ten days. I think I told you about the old juggernaut cars in one of my letters. They are tremendous things and must weigh several tons. In the old days natives would throw themselves under their wheels as they were drawn along—this insured their going to heaven, they said."

"Of course, they don't do that any more, but the festival still survives. All the natives come down from different parts of the interior to a place about 12 miles from Puduchottai, where the festival is to be held. One of my inspectors and I went out yesterday afternoon. There must have been 100,000 natives there. I never saw such a crowd and I was the only white person. Most of the people had never seen a white person before, except an occasional missionary or two, and a big crowd followed me about wherever I went. They have these festivals at different places, but almost all of the others their old customs have been abolished or prohibited, while out here in the interior, where there is no one to interfere, a great many of them are still observed."

Natives Superstitious. "An uneducated native believes that if he inflicts some punishment upon himself he will gain favor in the eye of his God. We saw a great many of them doing this in various ways. A lot of men had iron spikes stuck through their sides and were doing dances. Others were lying down on beds of cactus. Some girls were dancing while they held pots in their hands in which a fire was burning. I never knew before that this kind of thing still went on. The car was decorated and was drawn through the streets by thousands of people. It was certainly some experience, but I wouldn't care to do it over again. The natives were very friendly so far as I was concerned, only curious."

"This morning our agent, who is a very wealthy and influential man here, accompanied me to visit the Rajah's palace. The Rajah is in Europe and no one lives in the palace. One of the Rajah's brothers lives in Trichinopoly, and I know him fairly well. The palace grounds are surrounded by a square wall about a mile long on each side. There are some deer and other small animals which live in the grounds. It is a tremendous palace and must have cost a world of money to build. On the outside there are a great many pillars of black marble. The doors are immense and are of teak wood inlaid with ivory figures. It is three stories high and is built in the form of a square with a hole in the center which forms a courtyard and in the middle of the building."

"The architecture is something like what you have seen in movies and pictures, with turrets and domes and everything like that. In the back of the palace compound there is a very dense thicket that extends for miles. It is full of bear and other wild animals and is used by the Rajah for hunting when he is here. After we had been in the palace for some time through the state museum here which is fairly interesting."

"Today for lunch our agent sent over a lot of native dishes which were very good. There were about ten different curries and rice, a pheasant fixed some queer way and a pudding. All in all, I have never enjoyed a trip as much as this one and I will have to go back to Trichinopoly, which I will have to do this afternoon. I am going by motor, as it is very much shorter, for I would have to go all the way to Arantangi to catch the train."

"The heat is getting pretty bad now—over 100 degrees during the day."

MACON EDITOR ASKS $70,000,000 ROAD BOND ISSUE

Waycross, Ga., May 18.—(Special.) W. T. Anderson, editor of the Macon Telegraph, and member of the state highway commission, in speaking to the Highway club of Waycross, urged the passage of the state highway bond issue of $70,000,000.

Anderson said some interesting figures in connection with the passage of the bond issue. He stated, "If a bond issue of $70,000,000 was floated, the present tag tax and gas tax would pay off the issue in 20 years. It costs $250 a mile each year to maintain a dirt road. It costs only $50 per mile to maintain a paved road. We are therefore wasting $200,000 a year on the attempted maintenance of dirt roads."

"The average annual rainfall in Georgia is from 50 to 55 inches. There are 81,000 miles of roads in Georgia. It costs $45 a mile to scrape a road after a rain. That is, each shift of rain costs the state $405,000."

in the cost of scraping the roads thereafter.

"Maryland paved its roads and added one year to the average life of its automobiles. That means $37,500,000 saved, if we invest in a $70,000,000 bond issue."

The luncheon, which was given by the local Highway club, proved to be a most interesting and delightful affair. Among the other speakers were W. R. Neal, state highway engineer; H. G. Smith, state construction engineer; W. F. King, United States engineer; Judge T. E. Patterson, of the state prison commission; John N. Holder, chairman of the state highway commission, and H. M. Pafford, engineer in charge of the Waycross division.

POISON IS BLAMED IN DEERING DEATH

San Francisco, May 18.—Charles E. C. Deering, heir to the Deering Harvester millions, died from venereal poisoning and not from injuries received in an aviation accident, Frank T. Green, city toxicologist, reported Sunday.

As a result of the unexpected finding, Coroner T. B. W. Leland has ordered an inquest for Monday and will seek to learn the truth attending the circumstances under which Deering died 10 days ago.

Deering was the grandson of the founder of the Deering Harvester company. At the time of his death it was stated that old injuries received in an aviation accident were responsible.

The gift is the second made for Mrs. Shiholzer's memorial in the two days. Saturday, J. W. Shiholzer announced a gift of $10,000 cash to the college, and the sale of his beautiful villa opposite the college to the college for $25,000 less than it cost him twelve years ago.

Farmers of Calhoun Use Calcium Arsenate To Down Boll Weevil

Arlington, Ga., May 18.—(Special.)—Many farmers in this section will use calcium arsenate and other poisons in an effort to combat the boll weevil during 1924, according to a statement by several close observers of farming conditions in this section.

At this early time in the season, prospects for a good crop are excellent, as practically every farmer has a good stand of cotton.

SPARTA TRUCK RAISERS MARKET VEGETABLES

Sparta, Ga., May 18.—(Special.)—Truck farmers in the vicinity of Sparta are now harvesting their early vegetables, which find a ready cash market here and in nearby cities. Although later than usual on account of weather conditions, vegetables are of a very fine grade. More truck has been planted this year than heretofore, for market as well as home consumption. The county agent here has stressed the need of a big garden in connection with every farm, and hundreds have taken his advice.

12 REDS, 3 POLICE HURT IN CLASHES

Berlin, May 18.—Three policemen and 12 "Reds" were injured in day-long clashes Sunday at Fuerstenwalde, 25 miles from Berlin, when 6,000 communists, armed with pistols, brass knuckles and clubs, descended on the town to break up a fascist demonstration staged there by a Uhlans regiment.

The communists were from Berlin. Some went by train to the pretty little community, while other units marched the whole distance. Local police, heavily reinforced by Berlin "green police," used rubber clubs with loaded ends in driving the gangs off, and were finally compelled to fire a few shots.

At sundown the police announced that they had the situation under control, but it was believed that the communists were mustering their forces outside the town gates for a night attack.

Georgia Bus Association Improving Jitney Service

Since the Georgia Bus Association was organized a few weeks ago a wonderful improvement has been made in the jitney business in Atlanta.

This association as soon as it began to function began a school of instruction for the drivers and safe and sane driving is absolutely insisted upon from every man enrolled in the association.

A system of good service to the public was next inaugurated and now a schedule is being maintained over several routes that insures their patrons that a car will pass along every few minutes and this good service and schedule will soon be in effect on every route.

An efficient inspector is now employed by this association who is carefully looking after the personal conduct of each driver while on duty whether he owns his own car or not.

No speeding is permitted nor drinking allowed among the drivers and it is impressed upon each man that as

McIntyre, Scott, Knight Co. Making Remarkable Record

The insurance firm of McIntyre, Scott, Knight & Co., of 345-51ed Atlanta Trust Building, is making great progress in all lines of their business.

The promptness with which they have been handling all claims in the fidelity and casualty departments and the good service they are rendering their patrons is gaining much new business for them each month.

This firm is the outgrowth of Hase & McIntyre, which was in business here for thirty years, and this present firm, which was established a little

Local Water Company Now Running Full Capacity

It takes the consistent operation of three one-ton trucks to meet the regular line of customers daily that the Pura Water company supply with the well known "Waukega" Lithia water. The growth of the firm, and the additional customers that are becoming to realize the necessity of pure water has made it practical for the Pura Water company to add two more trucks to their business, thereby making the service doubly good.

One of the new trucks is used exclusively for the delivering of "Waukega" Lithia water, especially to soda fountains throughout the city.

This firm has been operating since 1909 at 21-23 Piedmont avenue, and covering greater Atlanta and East Point and other suburbs. The plant covers floors, 4x100 feet. Employ eight people in the business and produce annually 150,000 gallons of distilled water (aerated). This plant is considered the most efficient and

C. W. RUSSELL'S SON DOING GOOD WORK

Since the passing away of C. W. Russell last November, his son, H. C. Russell, is carrying on the same business that his father established thirty years ago.

This firm, which is located at 19 Peters street, are experts in the sheet metal business and the large numbers of satisfied customers of former years are placing new and repair work with the son like they did with the father.

Mr. Russell stated that their business is growing very rapidly and that they are making preparations to take care of the wants of more of their old-time friends and new customers as well.

The same policy of the father is being carried out in regard to good quality and prompt work is being carried out, and by steadily adhering to this policy the public knows that when the firm of C. W. Russell & Son does work for them it is well and quickly done.

SOCIAL WORKERS WILL CONVENE IN ATLANTA

New York, May 18.—A nationwide program for the employment of convicts in state and federal prisons to manufacture goods which state institutions will use, such as license plates for automobiles and furniture, was outlined today at the annual meeting of the National Committee on Prisons and Prison Labor, meeting at the home of its chairman, Adolph Lewisohn, at Ardley-On-the-Hudson.

Major Leroy Hodges, of Richmond, Va., president of the Virginia state prison board, declared the so-called prison labor competition with organized labor and capital, a "hoax."

Prisoners in Virginia were not only educated, he said, but taught some useful trade. The crying need, he urged, was for understanding among states for the disposal of prison-made goods.

To this end a conference of southeastern states has been called at Atlanta, Ga., in a few weeks, it was reported.

A national council, consisting of representatives of all states, soon will be formed to supervise the regional work.

Mrs. Hattie Matthews, of Grandby, Va., has completed forty-three consecutive years as postmistress in that town. Her first commission was signed six days after James A. Garfield was inaugurated president.

The Half-Time Wife

BY VIOLET DARE

CHAPTER XL.
The Truth Will Out.
Suzanne turned to her husband as if they had been alone.

"Geoff, I've done something without consulting you, but I don't believe you'll mind," she told him. "If you don't approve, please believe that I thought I was doing right. Give me credit for that, at least. You know that I've tried my best to do what you wanted me to, always—and I felt that I was doing what you wanted me to in this case, when you knew about it."

"I took an apartment for Lolita and Dick, and helped Lolita to furnish it. Dick knew nothing about it until today. It seemed to me that their only chance of happiness lay in having a home of their own. We had planned that they would establish themselves there, and then tell you about it later."

"But why didn't you consult me about it in the first place?" he asked. "Suzanne was not deceived by the mildness of his voice, however; she told herself that he'd wait till she had finished before he expressed his opinion, and she knew that he was likely to grow quieter as he grew angrier."

"Because—I well, you were so awfully busy; there was never a chance for us to talk just when we couldn't be so sure of each other. You hadn't confided in me, ever—she couldn't control the glance toward Mrs. Vale that punctuated that sentence, and she saw Geoffrey's lips tighten ominously, and hurried on, "and I thought you might not want to be bothered with this."

"You know that I had plans for Dick," he reminded her.

"Yes, but I well—"

"You thought yours were better," he said. "I did. If Dick and Lolita go on living here with us they can't be happy. They ought to live their own lives, even if it means that Dick has to give up the luxury to which he is so used. I'm going to support myself. Dick cut in, eagerly. "I've got a line on a job, and I know I can fill it. I can make good."

"You should have come to me with these plans for self-support," Geoffrey told him. "I'm your guardian, you know."

"Yes, but I well, I thought you wouldn't approve," Dick answered.

"You see, they're all been making their own arrangements," he exclaimed. "Really, Geoff, it seems to me—"

"Just a moment; I can handle this situation, Linda," Geoffrey interrupted.

"She won't let you, though." That was Lolita, who had been sitting quietly beside Dick. She was standing now, looking straight at her mother. "Oh, why don't you tell the truth?" she demanded of Mrs. Vale. "Why don't you admit what you've done? Why don't you admit that you've always been tricky? Why don't you tell Suzanne why it is that Mr. Atwood keeps you on his office, and lets you interfere in his affairs, and—"

"Lolita!" Mrs. Vale rose and swept majestically from the room.

Lolita turned to Suzanne with a helpless little gesture.

"She won't ever face it," she sighed. "She won't ever be honest with herself or anyone else. She was all right at first. She really wanted to earn a living, and support me. I was just a little thing then, when we first came here. She got a job as stenographer. But she couldn't stand it, just the daily grind. And she fell

BEAUTY CHATS

By Edna K. Forbes

LARGE PORES.

At least 85 women out of every hundred would have perfect complexions if it were not for large pores around the nostrils and in that little cleft of the chin. It may be because people are more careless washing the skin here; it may be because the circulation is more sluggish at these points. Whatever the cause, few can boast a really flawless complexion. Yet the remedy is fairly simple. Assuming that the digestive and bowel systems are healthy, as they must be to allow a healthy skin, the treatment consists merely in using cleansing cream, massage and then an astringent. The necessary time consumed each day need not be more than five minutes.

Wring a face cloth, or a small Turkish towel, from hot water and hold it for a minute or two over the face to open the pores. Rub in cleansing cream, and rub hard around the nostrils and the chin. Work in quite a bit. Then wring the cloth from hot water again and wipe off every possible bit of the cream. This proves much more effective than simply wiping it off with a dry rag, for the heat opens more pores, the minute pores, so that more cream and consequently more of the dirt in the pores, is washed out.

Rinse in cool or cold water. If you can rub the skin with a bit of ice for a few minutes, it is the best astringent treatment you can have. If that is not possible, spray toilet water, or toilet vinegar, over the face. Or pour a few drops of tincture of benzoin into a small basin of clear, cold water, enough to make it a little milky, and rinse with that. Or wipe over the skin with witch hazel, that also is astringent, and soothing as well.

If your complexion is oily, rub powdered oatmeal into the nose and chin instead of cleansing cream, and wash off with hot and cold water.

Dot—a healthy, little girl of 15 who lives outdoors a great deal of the time, has no need for cosmetics of any kind. If you tan badly, you can remove much of it with applications of buttermilk; and if you bathe every day, blackheads will disappear as the weeks go by.

A. C.—Massage the chest and bust gently using cocoa butter to fatten the tissues.

Mrs. W. K.—There should not be any need for hair tonic applications on a child's head. If the hair is thin, keep it very short and massage the scalp daily to increase its circulation. If the hair is poor because of any physical ill, the doctor should prescribe.

Tomorrow—Answered Letters.

All inquiries addressed to Miss Forbes in care of the "Beauty Chats" department will be answered in these columns in their turn. This requires considerable time, however, owing to the great number received. A personal or quicker reply is desired, a stamped and self-addressed envelope must be enclosed with the question.—The Editor.

Jane Hedden Hat Pattern

The Colorful Sport Hat.

The out-of-door time of year is with us and hats for city, garden, farm and country club occupy the milliners. It is with the sport hat that the home milliner especially enjoys her work. Making hats for organdie, crepe or knitted costumes becomes a pleasure to her. Short lengths of bright materials make the loveliest of hats. A few hours of careful work will, with the aid of one of our hat patterns, make a darling costume model. No girl who desires to dress well and has but a modest income can afford to be without this help.

The most fascinating needlework in the world is the making of growing-made flowers that have real design. The work progresses more rapidly for the amount of time expended than embroidery or lace. The results are charming in their rich effects of color and in the needlework value which they give to any article of dress on which they are used. Two cactus blossoms of original design from the only trimming for model 2348.

Narrow stripping, the fine braid of which a milan hat is sewn, is sewn on to the fabric crown to give a lattice effect. A fold of maline or transparent hair braid supplies the desired soft effect to the mushroom brim.

MATERIAL REQUIRED. One yard 36-inch material, 10 yards narrow braid, 1 yard maline, 1 1/2 yard 36-inch material for flowers, 1 1/2 yard green for leaves and stems, 1 pressed crown, 1 cap lining, 3 yards brace wire, 3-8 yard elastic net.

Of Shorter College.

Rome, Ga., May 17.—Shorter students celebrated May day with the presentation of "The Triumph of Spring," a May pageant, on the college campus. Miss Elizabeth Turner, Columbus, was crowned queen; Miss Edith Hughes, Bartow, Fla., presented the crown, and Miss Mildred Tyler, Albany, played the role of court jester.

The queen was attended by ladies in waiting and flower girls, wearing vari-colored spring frocks and carrying baskets of wistaria, and heralds in white satin robes. Two little pages, who bore the queen's train, were Kenneth McAllister and Marion Wingfield; Little Jane Betts was crown bearer. As Goddess of the Seasons, Miss Ora Upshaw, Covington, summoned the seasons, impersonated by students in costume and aesthetic dances. The program closed with a colorful May pole dance.

The pre-commencement calendar at Shorter has been marked by a series of student recitals. The senior vocal recital of Miss Caroline Gray, Locust Grove, and the piano recital by Miss Marjorie Wood, Birmingham, were outstanding musical events of the past week. Miss Virginia Bradley, Swainsboro, appeared in senior dramatic recital, giving Edward Peple's "The Littlest Rebel." Miss Grace Marie Ritchie, Shelby, Ohio, presented Israel Zangwill's "The Melting Pot."

Among the visitors at Shorter recently were Mrs. A. S. Bradley, Swainsboro; Dr. and Mrs. Claude Gray, Nelson Gray and Miss Nettie Gray, Locust Grove; Miss Katherine Bradley, Swainsboro; Mrs. Cooper Kirby and Mrs. Will Lanier, West Point; Mrs. F. E. From Lucy Cobb.

The Latin class of Lucy Cobb, under the direction of Miss Dorothy Latta, presented a Latin play, "A Roman Wedding," on Thursday afternoon.

Friday afternoon Mrs. Frank Lipscomb entertained the Alumnae association of Lucy Cobb at her beautiful home on Milledge avenue. Miss Mildred Mell, president of Lucy Cobb, and the faculty were the guests of honor. The entire house was a mass of loveliness with quantities of roses, lilies and other spring flowers banked on every side. The seniors of Lucy Cobb assisted the hostess in serving.

Friday evening the advanced do-estic science class entertained the faculty with a unique "joy ride" dinner. The table was decorated to represent a country road, posted with placards representing sign-posts as place cards. The centerpiece was an automobile made of fruit and vegetables. License tags hung from the backs of the chairs and tiny Lucy Cobb goats and horns were the favors. This class is under the direction of Miss Dorothy Rowland.

Miss Harriet May Crenshaw presented her piano pupils in the annual recital, assisted by the voice pupils of Miss Louise Rosland, on Tuesday evening in Seney-Stovall chapel.

One Year To Live

BY JOHN HUNTER

He would have married her. She knew that now. He would have married her even if she had been doomed to die on the morrow—their wedding.

"It is easy to say you counted the days," she said.

"Had you come back I might never have been La Phalene."

His eyes flashed angrily and then softened.

"That," he said quietly, "is a lie."

She flushed. "What do you mean?"

"That attitude of indifference; this show and extravagance. I read it in your face that afternoon when I called on you about Ahmed. You were acting as much off the stage as on."

You are not La Phalene—but Elise Duchanier still."

Her hands moved helplessly, though she tried to restrain their movement.

"You deceive yourself. It would be very much better for you to go back to America and forget all about Paris and me."

He abandoned his assertiveness, and tried another avenue of attack.

"Why do you do it?" he asked gently. "Please don't deny that it is unbelieveable, any and all of it. You are suffering, and you are making me suffer. Why?"

She knew that any moment she might lose all control of herself and reveal the pitiful sham she was practicing. She would only be inflicting on him a share of her agony. It was best for him to go away, best that the memory of Elise should be wiped out by the cold indifference of La Phalene.

"I admit that I am nervous and troubled. It is because of my folly that these two men quarreled, and I don't think I shall ever forget it. It has brought me to the verge of a breakdown. Apart from that I have everything one can wish for—admiration, wealth, fame—what more can I ask?"

He said: "Love."

She smiled. "Love comes afterwards. You had no time for love while building up your wealth."

"God help me, I had not," she said. "But love came to me, and I think love has come to you." He stepped closer to her. "You love me," he said.

She shook her head.

"How can you deny it? Elise—just tell me that you love me, that you are the girl whose memory I have treasured all these months."

Her face was averted, so that he could only see her profile. Acting on the urge of an impulse, he stepped close to her and put his hand on her shoulder. She tensed, and with that, his arms went about her. He stooped as though to kiss her.

"If you don't let me go, I shall die of shame," she gasped. "None of the others has ever dared this. And that you of all of them—"

His arms fell and he stepped back. She stood, swaying, white and shaken.

He said at last: "I can find out. There is nothing to say. I love you, and I can't bear to stand by and watch you—as you are. That is all."

He did not wait for her to speak, but turned and walked abruptly from the room.

He did not regret having taken her in his arms. The momentary shame which had succeeded the action had given place to defiant exultation. She loved him. She had shown it in those moments, had shown it clearly.

Why she should deny it, why she should try to send him away, passed his comprehension. The thought that her departure savored more of a flight than a holiday. She was going away, and she refused to tell him where.

Yet he thought he could find out. Lolette might know, for Lolette knew so many people who knew Elise.

Within twenty-four hours of Elise's traveling south, Kendrick was en route to Monte Carlo.

Lolette followed him. Brunel and Mordac were already there.

CHAPTER LV.

Elise went straight to the Hotel de Paris, and secured a room overlooking the glory of the bay.

She had slept on the train, and as it was her first visit to Monte Carlo, refreshed by a bath and breakfast, she set out.

There was a gentle breeze from the sea, which softened the heat of the blazing sun. The terraces were alive with wonderfully scented women, with smart men. The great Casino was like a fairy palace reared in a dream; while the great hills behind shimmered lazily, blue-edged against the sky.

She leaned on the balustrade watching the drifting, brilliant tide of humanity and she did not notice the approach of the two men through the crowd, until they stood before her. Brunel and Mordac! Her heart seemed to stand still for a moment. Then she smiled.

"First I met Mordac—next La Phalene. What else could I hope for, even in this beautiful place?" said Brunel.

Mordac shot a glance at him. "A compliment in which you include me, monsieur." And then to Elise: "I suppose you are staying at the Paris?"

"Yes. I got in this morning. And you?"

"Oh—I have a little villa up at Beausoleil. You can see it from the Route de la Turbie. It stands beyond the Riviera palace. Brunel is staying with me."

"I would rather not, if you don't mind. I am tired after my journey, and I shall lunch quietly and lie down during the afternoon."

"A most admirable decision," declared Mordac. "Then you will be fresh for play this evening. You will go along to the rooms?"

Elise admitted that she had contemplated doing so.

Brunel shrugged his shoulders. Elise dropped ten francs on No. 10.

It was one of those freaks of chance which occur occasionally. She had doubled her stake on a 35 to 1 chance, and it came off.

She raked in three hundred and fifty francs, and she was very excited.

They were all clattering together over her luck, she very flushed and laughing, when a man pushed into the crowd further up the table just as the croupier announced: "Faites vos jeux!"

The man's evening dress was the slightest bit the worse for wear, and in his eyes was a haggard, shifting light. His tongue touched his lips furtively, and he hesitated; then, with a gesture, he dropped five francs on to zero.

The wheel was spun, and the man watched the ball with eager, half-frightened eyes. Elise also watched it. She had fifteen francs on No. 13.

Neither zero nor 13 turned up. The ball clicked to rest, and the man looked around the table. His eyes rested on Elise and he started, then hurried away through the crowd.

Elise half got from her seat and then sat down once more as Brunel leaned over her. "Is anything wrong?" he asked.

"Only—I thought I saw somebody I knew—a doctor from Paris, named Lapierre. But it couldn't have been."

She drew a long breath. "What shall I luck next?"

Her brain was thudding and she felt confused. If it was really Lapierre she had seen, then surely the fates had guided her to Monte Carlo. For now they were all here, all that original circle—Brunel, Mordac, Lapierre, Lolette and herself. It needed only Kendrick and the game was complete.

For an hour they sat at the table, and in that hour Elise lost the whole of her 350 francs gain and some 50 francs of her capital besides. Lolette was almost even—perhaps 20 or 30 francs to the bad.

Mordac suggested that they might retire to the atrium for some refreshment and rest, and they went out there.

They met Kendrick. Elise was not surprised. It was as though he had an appointment with them there. He walked through from the vestibule, saw her, saw them all, and came straight across.

Lolette greeted him with the most enthusiasm. Mordac and Brunel evidently made up their minds to make the best of things, for they were exceedingly charming and talkative.

Mordac had told Kendrick of his "little villa" above Beausoleil.

"But that is nothing," he said. "It is Brunel who is really the most important landed proprietor among us. He has become a medieval baron—a real robber count, with a castle in the mountains."

They were immediately interested and demanded further information. Brunel laughingly denied any claim to importance. Mordac continued:

"There is in the Basses Pyrennees, standing on a crag, with a winding road going up to it, and the great Pyrenees behind it, a curious 8-eyed Bateau. It has towers, a portcullis, a drawbridge, and everything complete, like a fairy book. It is called the Chateau Tortmain."

They were all amused and all still curious. The young American immediately wanted to see it. He wanted to see every old castle and every old home in Europe.

"All right," said Brunel. "Later we will run across and look at it. It is a fairly long journey, but a delightful one, and I will act the baronial host."

The proposal was received with acclamation, and it being arranged that Kendrick should run Lolette and Elise to Paris in his car, the party broke up, not, however, before arrangements had been made for them all to meet on the morrow. Mordac took Lolette and Elise was accompanied by Kendrick. As they went down the steps Kendrick said quietly: "You know why I have come. Why do you persist in running away from me?"

Her face was very pale in the light, but her eyes were tender and soft.

The hand on his arm trembled slightly.

"Please don't ask me. But—I am glad you came—ever so glad. I tried not to be, but I can't help it."

His other hand closed over hers. So they were seen by Lapierre, lurking at the side of the broad walk. He saw the expression on Elise's face; he saw the love in Kendrick's attitude, for his own love made his perception for such things quickened and sharp. He turned and blundered away.

CHAPTER LVIII.

The days drifted by, as though all life was a quiet floating down a sunlit stream, and with the passing of each twenty-four hours, Elise became conscious of an increasing tension among those immediately surrounding her.
